BRIGHT COFFEE SALE ANALYSIS

Six-month sales performance and practical growth opportunities

Sales are balanced across all three stores

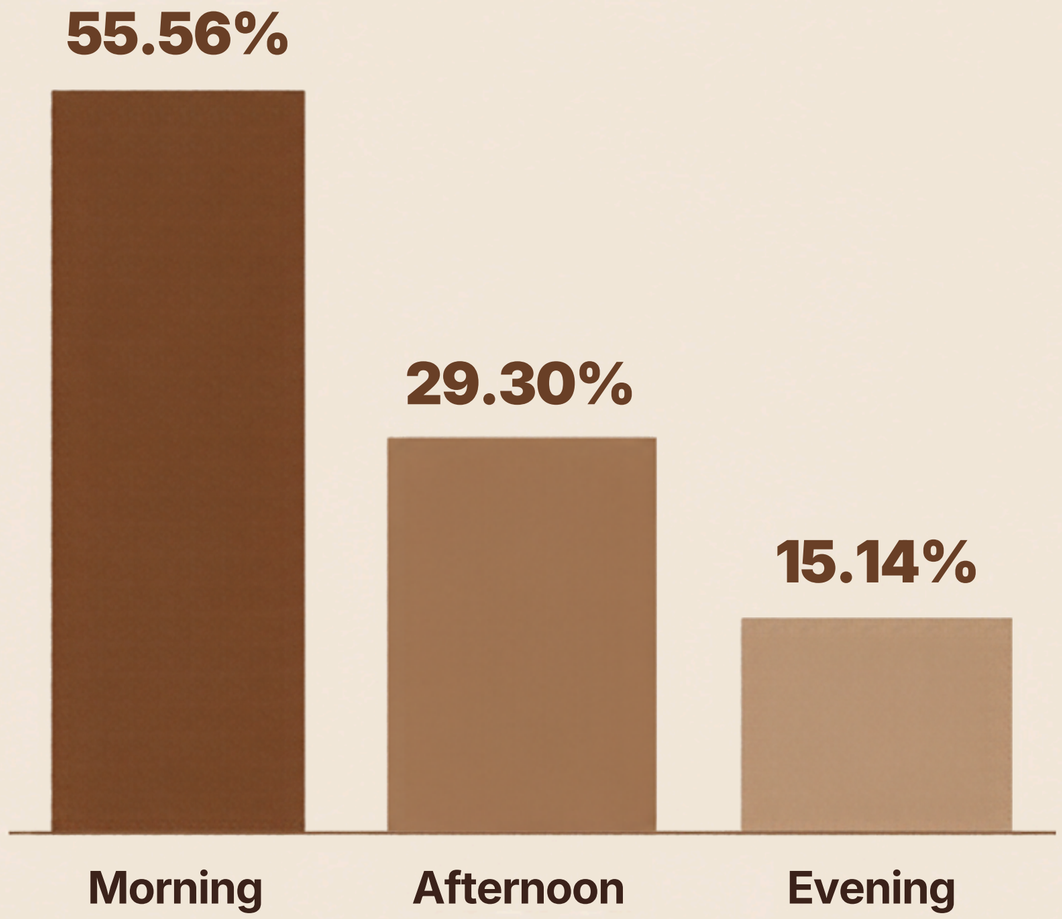

- Hell’s Kitchen leads with 33.84% of total sales.
- Astoria follows at 33.23%, just 0.16 percentage points behind Hell’s Kitchen.
- Lower Manhattan contributes 32.92%, trailing Hell’s Kitchen by 0.92 percentage points.

Store sales are nearly evenly distributed across Hell’s Kitchen, Astoria, and Lower Manhattan.

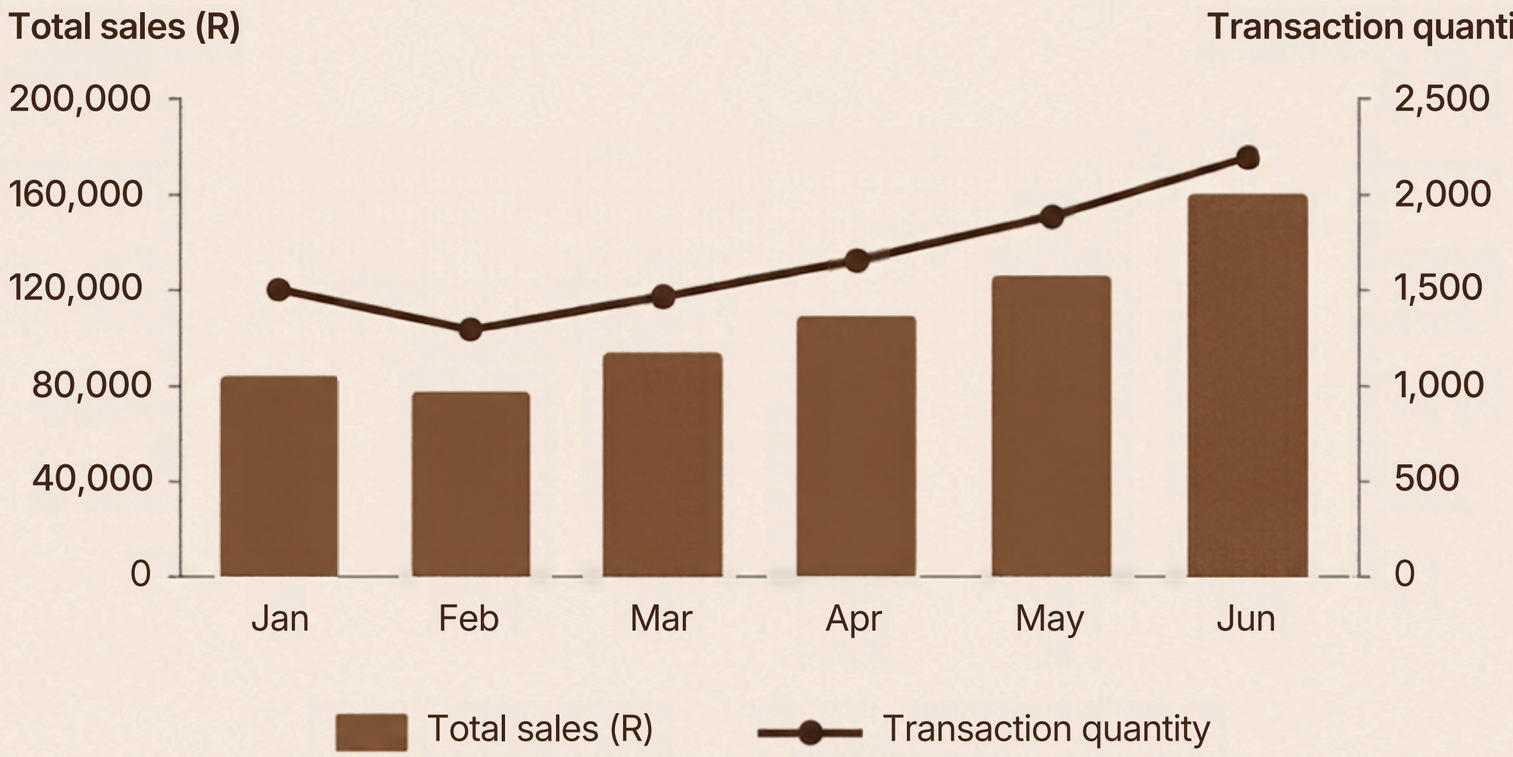

Morning drives more than half of sales

- Morning generates R388,288.67, accounting for 55.56% of total sales.
- Afternoon contributes 29.30%, while evening is the weakest period at 15.14%.

Sales climb steadily after February

- Sales dip from R81,677.74 in January to R76,143.19 in February, then grow each month.
- June sales of R166,484.88 are about double January’s level.

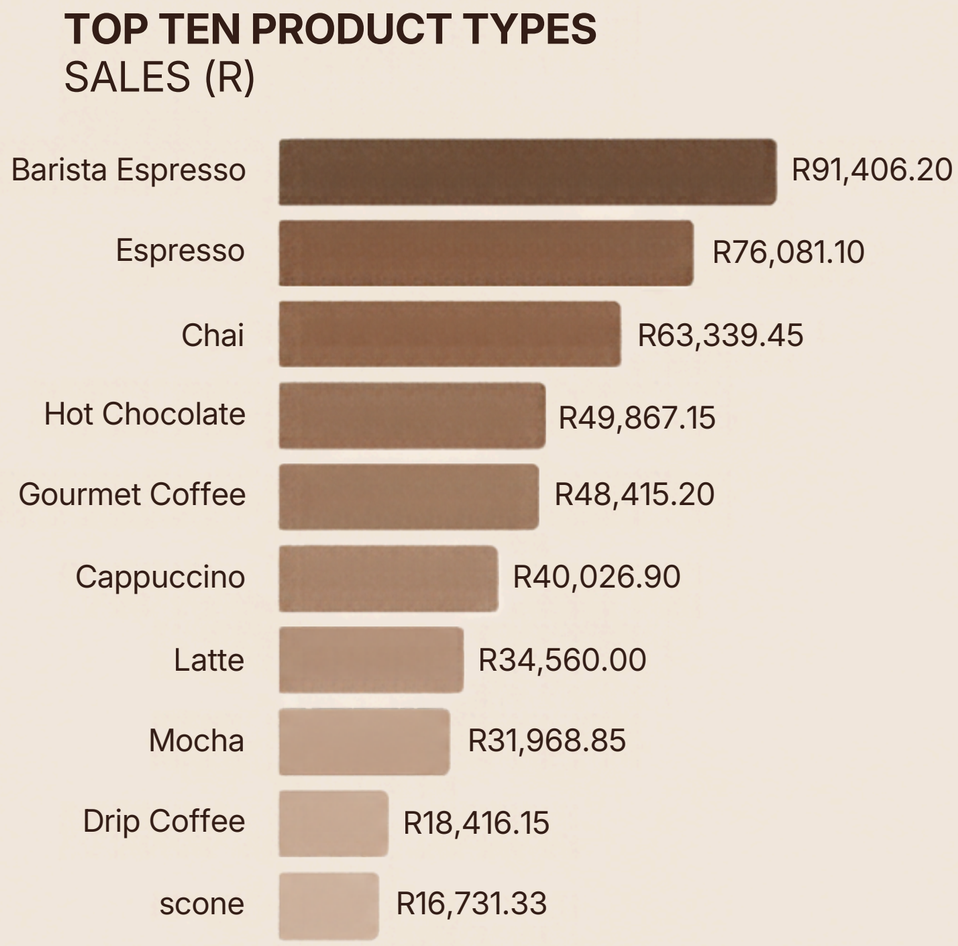

June sales

R166,484.88

are about double January’s level.

Espresso leads product sales

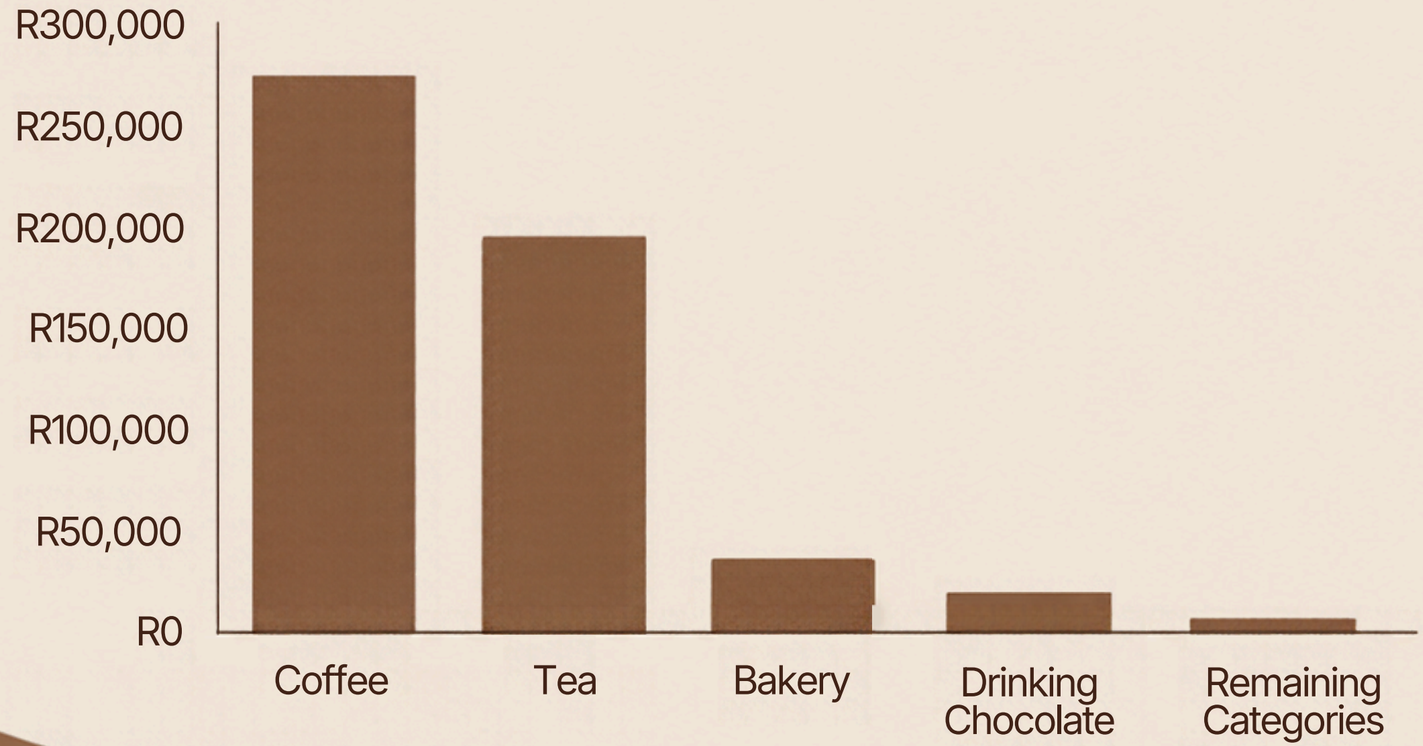

- Barista Espresso leads at R91,406.20, about 13% of the R698,812.33 six-month total.
- Espresso, Chai, Hot Chocolate, and Gourmet Coffee together make up about 45% of sales.
- Drip Coffee and scone are the weakest among the top ten products.

SIX-MONTH TOTAL SALES

R698,812.33

Coffee and tea lead category sales

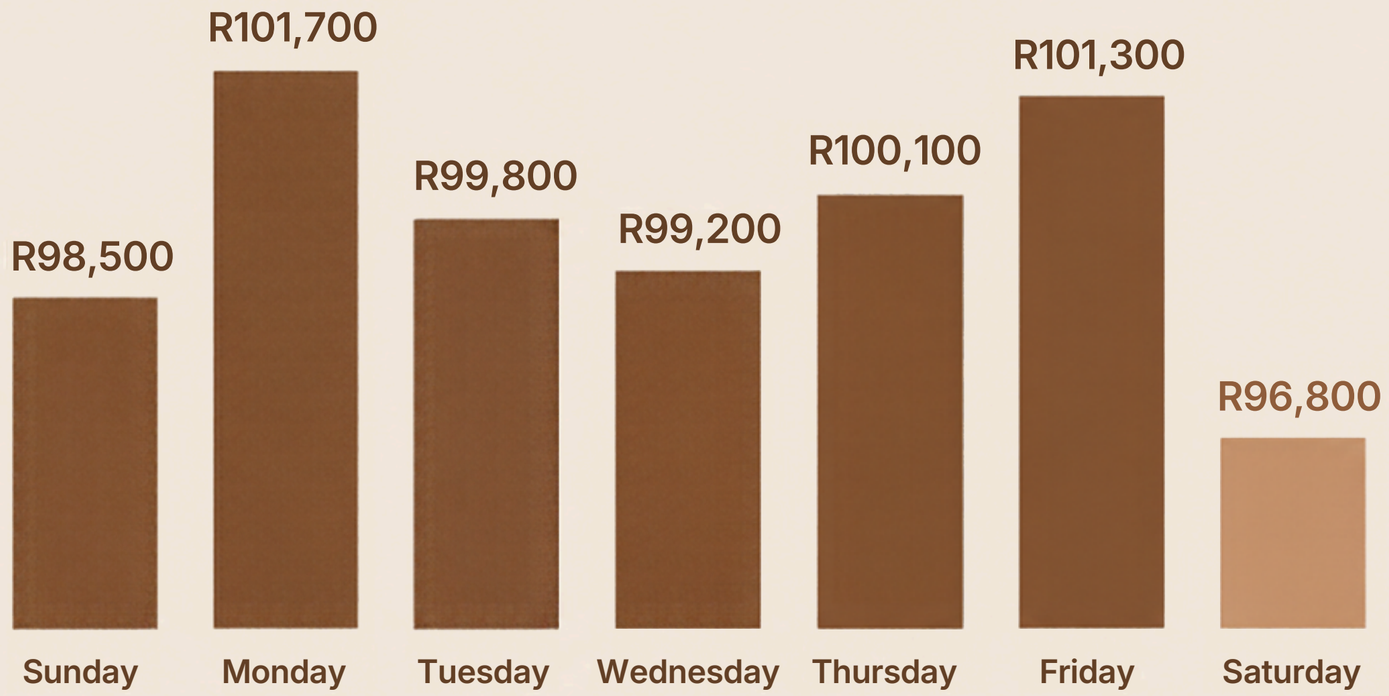

- Coffee generates approximately R269,952.45, followed by Tea at around R196,405.
- Bakery and Drinking Chocolate contribute less, while remaining categories generate minimal revenue.

Dairy sales soften toward the weekend

- Monday records the highest dairy sales at approximately R101,700, followed by Friday at around R101,300.

- Saturday is lowest at approximately R96,800, indicating a weekend decline in customer purchases.

Turn the sales findings into focused actions

Grow the evening-Test evening-only pastry-and-drink combos or a discounted second drink.

Offer pre-orders to speed up morning queues and reduce lost sales.

Try a weekend loyalty-stamp promotion to improve Saturday performance.

Apply the same playbook across all three similarly performing stores.

Push coffee and tea, then pair them with bakery.